THAW'S INSANITY CURED BY MURDER, HIS COUNSEL CLAIM

"Stuporous Melancholia" Replaces "Dementia Americana" in Argument of Defense That Shock of Tragedy Restored Reason.

In his trial for the murder of Stanford White, which begins Monday, Harry Thaw's lawyers will allege that at the time of the killing their client was suffering from "stuporous melancholia."

For a defense such as Thaw's legal staff contemplates this new disease of "stuporous melancholia" offers most attractive symptoms. Delphin Michael Delmas's famed "Dementia Americana" and the more prosaic but effectually hard-worked dementia praecox and plain paranoia are not be to enrolled in the same class.

According to the interpretations which Thaw's medical experts will put on it, "stuporous melancholia" is a form of emotional insanity which of the fire, the clatter of and the pounding of engines and the pounding of engines renders the patient incapable of judging the nature and quality of his acts, and yet endows him with a general realization of what he is doing

White, William Solomon, Charles M. Swift and several capitalists of Detroit. Secretary Tafft said that the Government was also interested in seeing the railroad building and had already made a loan of $50,000.

The promoters require an additional loan of an equal amount, and that was the subject of the conference to-day. "And I shall have other meetings uptown and down," said Secretary Taft. These, I expect, will keep me busy until midnight, when I start for Washington, I do not believe that the public will be interested to know the nature of these meetings.
